HEALTH HINTS for LIVESTOCK

TAKE NO CHANCES IN TREATING STOCK

Livestock health is a serious dollars-and-cents proposition. The farmer who fails to pay proper attention to disease hazards and nutrition problems is making a mistake which may prove tragic and costly.

Be sure he has proper credentials.

Nevertheless, needless losses are being reported every day. Animal husbandry authorities are more and more concerned over the problems of careless, indiscriminate "tinkering" with the health of valuable livestock and poultry.

Here is a summary of the most reliable advice on the right and wrong ways to tackle disease problems:

(1) Beware of impostors. In some localities, unscrupulous individuals are reported preying on livestock owners and claiming to be veterinarians. Before an owner permits anyone to treat his stock, he should be sure that person has the proper credentials and is licensed to practice veterinary medicine in his state.

(2) Go easy on "home remedies." Many diseases of livestock are so similar in appearance and symptoms as to require careful clinical examination, and frequently laboratory tests as well, to tell them apart. New "wonder drugs" — like penicillin, the sulfas, or hormone compounds—are useful in certain conditions but in others they are wasted, or may do actual harm. When animals become ill, it is frequently better to do nothing than to do the wrong thing.

(3) A loaded vaccination syringe may be a deadly weapon unless used by a person with proper scientific training. Indiscriminate vaccination or improper selection of products to be used may do more harm than good—sometimes actually spreading serious plagues of livestock while attempting to control others.

Rescue Experts Slog Through Everglades for Training

IMMOKALEE, FLA. — Twelve grizzled air force rescue experts slogged through the Everglades swamps on a 26 mile trek in some of nature's meanest terrain.

The hike is to train doctors, medical corpsmen and rescue teams how to traverse swamps and jungle on rescue missions.

The "jungle phase," however, is just the first part of a rigorous training planned for the soldiers. Later they will practice salt water survival on the Florida gulf coast, then go to Alaska for arctic survival and still later to a desert area to learn how to live there.

When the teams have completed their training, they will be used to reach crashed planes in any part of the country.

For three days the men, specially selected soldiers from the 5th rescue squadron, lived off nature.

They first parachuted into a dense wooded area, snagging their chutes in trees and lowering themselves to the ground with 150 foot ropes.

Then they hacked a clearing out of the underbrush and caught snakes, raccoons, opossums and fish. They ate roots and the hearts of cabbage palms. At night they fashioned hammocks for sleeping and ate and cooked with utensils made from bamboo joints.

Chief Petty Officer Has Troubles to Talk About

OAKLAND, CALIF. — Troubles? Listen to Chief Petty Officer John Lambert's.

He was transferred from Alameda naval air station to the navy's torpedo testing ground near Pasadena, but—the airplane he boarded took him to the guided missile center at Pt. Mogu instead.

While he was stranded there, his wife, whom he hadn't seen in a year, arrived here by air.

The navy sent a friend of Lambert's to meet her but he got a ticket for speeding on the way.

The Lamberts finally were reunited in an Oakland apartment—but the landlord called police. He complained he hadn't been informed the apartment had been, sublet to the couple.

They were ordered to get out. The strain of it all caused Mrs. Lambert to collapse from nervous exhaustion. She was taken to Oak Knoll naval hospital.

The chief went to the police station to pay his friend's speeding fine of $5—and returned to find his own car ticketed for illegal parking.

Chicago Bootleg Figure of Early Gang Era Dies—in Bed

CHICAGO, ILL.—Peter Genna, 67, one of the six notorious Genna brothers of the early Chicago gang era, died in bed.

Pete thus became the second Genna to die a natural death. Two brothers "checked out" in gangland style and a third was killed by a policeman.

Police records disclosed that the Genna "boys" rose to power in the early twenties by organizing "alky cookers" into bootleg traffic. After Don O'Banion, north side beer baron, was slain in November, 1924, the Gennas tumbled fast. Apparently O'Banion's friends believes the Gennas had a part in the death.

Six months later "Bloody Angelo" Genna was ambushed. Less than a month later "Little Mike" dueled with police. Two policemen and mike were killed. Brother Tony died three weeks later in a hospital bed after he had been shot by gunmen.

Pete and Sam joined brother Jim in Italy later but returned in 1926. In 1930 Jim returned and tried to revive the "business," but a shotgun escapade with gunmen, in which he escaped injury, changed his plans.

Jim died in 1931. Sam leads a quiet life.

Tahitian Chief Can't See Why People Live in America

ST. LOUIS. — Tahiti is still the paradise it always has been, and Chief Charlie Manu of the Pacific island can't see why anyone would want to live in the United States.

"Politics? United Nations? We cannot worry about such things," the six-foot, two-inch islander said in halting English.

Then he gave his philosophy for happiness:

"Plant more, I tell my people, love more, and have more fun."

Charlie says it works.

"Swimming and outrigger canoeing and fishing; there is plenty for everybody," he said happily.

When asked if the Tahitian natives really wore sarongs, Charlie said, "Oh, I put on sandals and the women wear dresses when we go to the city of Papette, but otherwise one wears only a sarong. Why more?"

Charlie, whose real name is Arutemira Teratahi, admitted he liked the United States.

He said, "I like your ice cream and your buildings. And your girls are very nice. Dorothy Lamour is very nice, and Rita Hayworth — ah!"

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Pampered Farmers

...the folks in our town were so tolerant, they'd be really fed up over that nationally circulated article on "pampered farmers" describing them as living off the fat of the land.

...town where I sit the farmer is living less "pampered." If he's ...off today than twenty years ago because he's worked hard to improve the quality and quantity of his production.

...like Bert Childers, for example. ...s up at four in the morning, ...et the milking finished—and ploughing or harvesting, depending on the season, until sundown. In the evening he finally relaxes with the missus over a moderate glass of beer.

And the farmer today's not only temperate in his habits, like Bert's evening glass of beer . . but tolerant in his opinions. So he'll probably say of that article, "somebody got the facts wrong," and just let it go at that.

World War II Fails to Dim Oriental Courtesy in China

WASHINGTON. — Oriental courtesy has survived the war in China. The American consulate general in Peiping received the following letter with a copy of a new telephone directory:

"I am respectfully aware of your fine administrative efficiency and your ability to dispose of your official duties as easily as cooling yourself with a fan.

"Under your command, the situation becomes settled and the military atmosphere is changed to auspiciousness. I look high upon your great brightness and offer you my hearty congratulations for it.

"I, Nieh Chuan-ju, am in charge of telecommunications and feel ashamed of my low ability. Owing to the beginning of the change of the year, a new edition has been prepared. I am, accordingly, sending you with this short letter a copy of the telephone directory for your inspection and keeping.

"With greetings and kindest regards, I am very truly yours,

NIEH CHUAN-JU.

Declaration of Independence!

He's on his own. It's a wonderful feeling. He can go places now. And he'll keep on going places all his life—as long as he keeps his sense of independence.

That's America's richest resource—not forest, field or mine, but the spirit of her people. Ambition, energy, self-reliance are the reasons why individuals—and industries—grow great from small beginnings.

Take the electric industry—this company, for example. A few practical dreamers strung the first lines. People of faith and vision risked their savings. Other folks combined skill and hard work to produce better and better service—at lower and lower cost—creating more and more jobs—and carrying the benefits of electric living to more and more people.

That's the American way of progress. Free enterprise, vision and hard work. They are what built America and the highest standard of living in the world.

No nation has ever found a satisfactory substitute for that combination. No nation ever will.
